1. As the nation braced itself to bid a hearty farewell to a year that most of us would much rather forget, the President readied himself to break the news that the new year may not be quite as happy as originally anticipated.
2. The sobering reality of the President's address was that the second wave of COVID-19 infections is upon our shores. He cautioned that unless we act now and unless we act decisively, the number of new infections will far exceed what we experienced during the first wave and thousands more people will lose their lives.
3. In an instant, we regressed into an eerily familiar state of restriction, including harsher curfews and a reinstatement of the ban on social gatherings and the sale of alcohol. This change in alert levels has impacted a few aspects of community scheme living. These will be highlighted in the attached article.
